

GLASGOW MURDER CASE HERE

MAN WITH A CROOKED NOSE
ARRESTED ON LUSITANIA.

Slater, Before Sailing, Pawned a Diamond Brooch, Which He Says Was His Wife's—American Landlady Says Mrs. Slater Had One—One Also Missing.

A murder in Glasgow, Scotland, developed an American chapter yesterday when Oscar Slater was arrested as the liner Lusitania docked. The arrest was made on a warrant issued by United States Commissioner Shields at the instance of Courtenay W. Bennett, British Consul-General in this city. Slater, who sailed under the name of Otto Sands, or Sando, was easily recognized by the called description. He is a German, 37 years old, and has a prominent nose with a noticeable crook in it. He was accompanied by a tall French woman who he says is his wife. She is detained at Ellis Island.

On December 21 last Miss Marion Gilchrist, 80 years old, who lived alone with her maid at 15 Queen's terrace, West Princes street, Glasgow, was found murdered in her flat at that address and two men who were seen in the neighborhood have been arrested on suspicion. On Christmas Day word was called from Glasgow to the British Consul-General here that another suspect, a crooked nosed man, was about to sail for New York from Liverpool. The cable also said that a diamond brooch had been stolen at the time of the murder, but the Glasgow papers leave it in doubt if anything was stolen and describe a diamond brooch thought to be missing as "retrograde." Among the things taken from Slater is a pawn ticket for a three row diamond crescent brooch, on which he had secured a loan of $300. He says it was his wife's.

He was arraigned before Commissioner Shields, who held him for examination on January 18. He denied his guilt and in Marshall Henkel's office had an opportunity to confer with counsel, William A. Goodman. In a statement issued later through his lawyer Slater denied that he even knew the Gilchrist woman and declared that he did not leave Glasgow until four days after the murder. He said that the woman was murdered at 7 o'clock in the evening and that he had pawned the brooch before Miss Gilchrist's death. The date of the pawn ticket is December 21, the day of the murder. The pawnbroker was Alexander J. Liddell of 8 Sauchiehall street. Charles Cox, counsel for the British Consulate, took a copy of the ticket and will communicate with the Glasgow police.

Slater said in his statement given out through his lawyer that his Glasgow address was St. George's road, three miles from Miss Gilchrist's abode, and that on the day of the murder he was not nearer her home than a half mile. He added that he had been out walking with a friend and on the return he left a friend at a corner that distance from the scene of the murder. The friend in going to his own home was obliged to pass the Gilchrist place and in doing so learned of the crime and told Slater about it later in the evening.

Slater said that he and his wife had planned to sail for New York on December 26 and went to Liverpool on Christmas Day and stopped at the Lime Street Station Hotel.

At 117 East Nineteenth street, where the Slaters lived for four weeks about a year ago, Mrs. Katherine Conrad, who lets lodgings, said yesterday that Mrs. Slater had so much apparently valuable jewelry that she had requested Mr. Slater not to keep it in the house. It was taken accordingly to a safe deposit vault. Among the jewels, said Mrs. Conrad, was a crescent diamond brooch.

There was found in Slater's possession first class papers, which, on January 12, 1906, he gave his name as Oscar Slater and his address as 165 Sixth avenue. He is not now known at the Sixth avenue address under that name nor as Sando, Sando, Anderson or George, all of which names he has used. The Italian-American Gun Club used to harbor at this place, but the police made it remove.

Slater's citizen papers say that he was born in Prussia on January 8, 1872, and came to this country in 1902. It is understood that he worked as a dentist here at one time and that he was also an inventor. Last May, he says, he took his wife to the bath at Carlsbad. They travelled on the Continent and then went to Glasgow preparatory to sailing for New York from Liverpool. They went under the name of Sando for business reasons, Slater says. Slater had very little money with him when he got here.

Glasgow papers say that on the day of the murder Miss Gilchrist's maid went out about 6:30 P. M. to get an evening paper. When she returned she found her mistress lying on the bed in the dining room, her head beaten almost beyond recognition. Apparently the assailant had rung the door bell and when Miss Gilchrist opened the door had struck her down and carried her body into the dining room. One of the hobbies of the old lady was the collection of antique diamond brooches, necklaces and rings, and some of these were scattered about the room and it was stated that a small circular diamond brooch was missing, although the police dismissed robbery as the motive for the crime.

Miss Gilchrist had had a fear of burglars and had arranged with Mr. Adam, who lived in the flat below, to knock three times on the floor as a signal for assistance. Mr. Adam says that he heard knocking the evening of the murder, but as the blows exceeded three in number he concluded it was the maid breaking firewood. At the solicitation of his sister, however, Mr. Adam went up to Miss Gilchrist's apartment and met a man coming down stairs. A box in the old lady's bedroom had been forced open and several papers, rings and gold watches were found on the floor. The description of the man seen coming down stairs does not resemble Slater's.

"VICE-ADMIRAL" EVANS.

His Friends Would Like to See Him So Honored.

"Robley D. Evans a Vice-Admiral" is the suggestion made by many high up in military and naval rank in New York city and Washington. The movement proper will be launched on the night of January 8 at Carnegie Hall, where Rear Admiral Evans is to make his first public appearance as a lecturer.

The honor of Vice-Admiral has been bestowed on only one person in this country, David Dixon Porter. It is planned to call Congress's attention to the fact that the American people are slow in conferring honor where honor is due. Rear Admiral Evans has given forty-eight years of his life to the navy.

The rank of Rear Admiral was created in 1862 for the purpose of honoring Farragut. Then in 1866, in honor of his capture of New Orleans, the grade of Admiral was made. He and Dewey alone have borne the title of Admiral. During the same year the station of Vice-Admiral was created in recognition of David Dixon Porter's services.

The appearance of Rear Admiral Evans on the lecture platform promises to make that evening the biggest "navy night" that New York has seen for years. A military guard will be turned out under command of Gen. Horner Porter. The speaker will be introduced by Gen. Porter in behalf of the Navy League. After the address a public reception will be tendered the Admiral.

BRANDEGEE STILL LEADS.

His Friends Confident That He Will Win in the Senatorial Race.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 2.—The Hill and Brandegee forces are closing in on the fight for the United States Senatorship. The principals and their lieutenants are coming together for the final struggle with appearances still indicating that Brandegee is in the lead, as they have done all along.

Congressman Hill has come to Connecticut from Washington to remain until after the caucus of the Republican members of the General Assembly, which is expected to take place on January 12, but the call will not be issued until after the Legislature meets next Wednesday and a caucus committee is appointed. Senator Brandegee has been in the State for several days and he has been in Hartford several times recently conferring with his political friends. He has been receiving most encouraging reports from them, and he and they believe that a considerable majority of the Republican members of the Legislature are for him.

When Senator Brandegee was chosen four years ago to fill out the unexpired term of the late Orville H. Platt, the Legislature's selection met with approval on all sides. Mr. Brandegee has always been personally very popular. He has been Speaker of the House here and has frequently attended State conventions as a delegate. In these relations with leading Republicans of the State he made a host of friends, while at the same time his ability, his good judgment and his quality as an orator won distinct recognition.

Until after the Presidential election few persons except those in the confidence of Congressman Hill had any other thought than that Mr. Brandegee would be sent back to the Senate for a full term without opposition. Nobody expected or desired a change. The State at large was well satisfied to have him as its representative.

Then suddenly, after the election had passed, the candidacy of Mr. Hill was sprung. Everybody was astonished, but Mr. Hill had of course obtained the cooperation of a number of seasoned politicians before he entered the field. It is interesting to be a case of Mr. Hill's arrival against the wishes of the people. There is absolutely no public opposition to Senator Brandegee. It is altogether surprising that the politicians, but even at this Mr. Brandegee seems to have with him more of the strong elements of the old machine than Mr. Hill has.

While no one blames Mr. Hill for wishing to go to the Senate it cannot be denied that if the fight ends in the return of Senator Brandegee the State would have a sigh of relief and satisfaction. It is the talk that it would hardly be fair to throw the young Senator down just at the time when he has acquired enough of experience to become more and more useful in the Senate, more and more an ornament to the State.
